

Review misses out on middle schoolers

I attended the Celebration of the Arts on Monday, and it was truly a wonderful opportunity for the students of our Catholic schools to display their talents. I was very happy to see the Catholic Review devote so much attention to the event.

My children were among the performers for the evening. They worked very hard to achieve their performance and sacrificed much to make it possible. And yet, there was not one word about them - the middle school representational band that performed the first act of the evening - in your article. Thanks for ignoring their efforts!
