

Annual Convocation Being Hosted by AOB

The National Association of Church Personnel Administrators (NACPA) is holding its 50th annual convocation April 26-28, 2021, and the virtual event will be hosted by the Archdiocese of Baltimore. One of the convocation days is geared to the interests of pastors and financial/business directors and another day is focused on educators. Despite being unable to meet in-person, the planning committee is looking forward to introducing NACPA delegates to our archdiocese and its rich history in new and innovative ways. We are blessed that Archbishop Lori will welcome participants and preside at the opening prayer service. There will be approximately more than 200 attendees (HR directors and staff from dioceses across the country, financial/business directors, chancellors, pastors, principals and superintendents.) Joe Smith is representing the Archdiocese on the convocation planning committee. Further information on the excellent keynote speakers and workshops for each day will be provided later this month. A tentative schedule is available at www.nacpa.org. Please try to set aside some time to participate in an energizing and informative program.
